1. The creation of a modern Hungarian Army is the first preoccupation of both Soviet and Hungarian Communists. The new army is to consist of 21 divisions, one third of which will be motorized. In addition to the independent motorized units, every division will have a motorized battalion. Two battalions of politically completely reliable troops are to be attached to each division.
2. As a result of the organization of the new army, the country has been divided into four military districts with headquarters in Budapest, Szeged, Pecs and Debrecen. There will be seven corps of three divisions each. Budapest, Szekesfehervar, Szombathely, Pecs, Szeged, Debrecen and Miskolc will be headquarters for the various corps. The number of recruiting centers has been increased and there is now one in every district. Formerly there was one in every county.
3. Neither the Soviets nor the Hungarians are concerned with the creation of an Air Force in Hungary. They realize that the majority of pilots would use their planes for escape.
